Cats and dogs with CKD can often have waxing and waning appetites. Understanding that pets rely on more than just taste when determining what they will eat, Royal Canin® RENAL SUPPORT diets include several aromatic profiles along with kibble texture, shape and size that can help stimulate decreased appetites. Available in multiple aromatic profiles, in both wet and dry food, the diets can also be easily mixed or rotated for even more feeding options.

Tips for Stimulating a Patient’s Appetite

- Feeding a renal diet to a hospitalized patient will likely lead to food aversion. Hospitalized patients, therefore, should be fed their regular diet. Once home, a slow 7 day transition to the renal diet is recommended.
- Ensure adequate daily calorie intake and try feeding smaller amounts more often.
- Palatability of food may be enhanced by moderate warming of wet diets or adding warm water to dry diets.
- Multiple aromatic profiles along with kibble texture, shape and size that can help stimulate decreased appetites.
- Avoid feeding treats, snacks, or human foods, as many of these products may increase your patient’s levels of phosphorus or protein intake and may worsen clinical signs.

When choosing to recommend mixed feeding, it’s important to recommend an amount of both the dry and wet products to the pet owner. Download the tables with recommended mixed feeding amounts for cats and dogs at www.royalcanin.com/renal, or ask your Royal Canin representative for a mixed-texture feeding wheel.
